THE STORY

Sanya Parekh had the story, the voice and 8.7K followers. What she did not have was four spare hours for every reel.

One reel took about 4 hours, and it still went out with no animations. Her profile showed 7 posts in October, after a three-week gap in September. Her recipe reel about chasing slow dopamine was ready for a bigger stage.

Now she sends her clips and gets back a high-end reel in about 10 minutes, ready to go live. Every word stays exactly as she recorded it.

What she got

- Slow Dopamine: her recipe reel as a magazine cover, with word-by-word captions, a few quick transitions and a closing title card.
- Reintroduce: a word-by-word title on a trending audio, a font flicker on her name and a list of who she is.
- Instagram audit: one page with one main topic, three bio options, six named Reel series, a 30-day plan and a schedule of 3 to 4 Reels a week.

YOUR TURN

Your story is ready. Is your edit?

This is for you if

- Editing eats your week. You have the ideas, and the edit is what slows you down.
- Your story is strong and the edit looks basic. You want high end, and you still want to sound like you.
- You miss posting days. A reel that comes back ready to go live keeps the schedule moving.

How it works

1. Send your clips. Raw footage and a reference you love, nothing more to prepare.
2. Get your high-end reel. Your voice stays as recorded, with a look built around your own footage.
3. Go live. It comes back ready to post, with no editing left on your side.

Your next reel could be the cover.

Send your clips and a reference you love. You get back a high-end reel in your own voice, ready to go live.

About the numbers. Times are approximate, per reel, and exclude filming. Weekly hours are worked out from them at 4 Reels a week, the top of the 3 to 4 in her plan: 16 hours before, 40 minutes after. Follower and posting figures come from her public profile, viewed logged out on 26 October 2026. Vogue-style describes the look, with no link to Vogue magazine.
